Court declaring that bucket-shops were not illegal.

The only case of the kind known of is that of Elliott W. Todd, who was indicated for "keeping a room where wagers were made as to the fluctuations in the price of stocks, bought and sold in the New York Stock Exchange, as indicated by a stock quotation ticker." In that case the General Term of the Supreme Court deckied, Judge Brady writing the opinion, that the prisoner could not be convicted, practically holding that Todd's case did not come under section 313 of the Penal Code, under which he was tried. The Judge, however, added in his decision, that there was no doubt of the objectionable, demoralizing nature of Todd's business, and suggested that the laws be amended so as to cover such offenses.

Judge Brady rendered that opinion in the January term of 1889, and the Legislature, which was then in session, promptly acted upon his suggestion. By chapter 428, of the Laws of 1889, the gambling law was amended so as to put bucket-shop proprietors in their proper class. This is the amendment as it is now spread upon the statute book:

Every lawyer in the city laying claim to knowing anything whatever about criminal law, is aware of this amendment, but apparently Mr. Ridgway is not, else why, it is asked, did he declare that the bucket-shops complained of have a right to exist. "The machinery is new and not sufficiently broken in as it were to be intrusted with the operation of the cable, and we do not utilize it.

"The long delay was caused by the time occupied if fixing up the trouble, but we expect to have the duplex machinery ready for any emergency by to-morrow night."

President Vreeland added that the trouble the Company had with Supt. Hankinson, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelivito Animals, grew out of a misunderstanding.
